Space: Each chicken needs about 3-4 square feet inside the coop and more outside

in the run.

Daily Care: What a Kid s Guide to Keeping Chickens Teaches

About Chicken Care

Once your chickens arrive, the real fun begins! Taking care of chickens every day helps

Feeding Your Chickens

Chickens love to eat grains, seeds, and kitchen scraps like vegetable peels. But the most important food is a special chicken feed that has all the vitamins and nutrients they need.

Always provide fresh, clean water because chickens drink a lot, especially on hot days.

You can also give treats like mealworms or corn, but remember these should be occasional snacks, not their main diet.

Chickens can be messy, so cleaning their coop regularly is important to stop smells and keep bugs away. A kid s guide to keeping chickens always suggests:

Removing old bedding and replacing it with fresh straw or wood shavings once a

This teaches about life cycles and responsibility since chicks need extra care and warmth.

Gardening and Chickens: A Perfect Team

Chickens love to peck in the garden and eat bugs, which helps keep pests away from plants. You can create a ?chicken run? in part of your yard and let them help with natural pest control.

Be careful to protect your favorite ?owers or vegetables because chickens also like to scratch and dig. Using chicken wire or fencing can keep them in safe areas.

Creative Projects with Chicken Supplies

You can use eggshells for arts and crafts or make homemade treats for your chickens.
