Sarah: ?I?ve been feeling really overwhelmed at work lately. The pressure keeps building, and I?ve started having trouble sleeping.?

The counselor then probes gently into several areas such as family background, medical history, and prior counseling experience:

Sarah: ?I have a close friend, but I don?t usually talk about these things with anyone else.?

It is an exploratory dialogue where the counselor learns about the client?s presenting issues, personal history, and goals for therapy. Simultaneously, the client gains an understanding of the counseling process, con?dentiality boundaries, and what to expect moving forward. Typically lasting between 45 and 90 minutes, the initial interview is structured yet ?exible, allowing for natural conversation ?ow while covering essential topics. The counselor often follows a semi-structured format that includes open-ended questions to encourage client elaboration, alongside more targeted inquiries to clarify speci?c concerns.

Presenting Problem and Goals

Clients are invited to describe the issues that brought them to counseling. This dialogue helps de?ne the focus areas and potential objectives for treatment.
